HELPFUL HINTS FOR DOING SCOTTISH RESEARCH

Betty Whamond Wurtz, Ann Arbor, Michigan

The Salt Lake City Family History Library (SLC FHL) probably has a better collection of materials on the British Isles than any other geographical area in the world other than the United States. Librarians are well informed and can often correct errors in the spelling of Scottish hamlets, villages, burghs and parishes.

The library of the Genealogical Society of Wasthenaw County has several helpful volumes for doing Scottish research. The Research Guide for Scotland, The Scottish Gazetteer, and the Old Parish Registers (OPR) are especially helpful. The first gives all kinds of information on Scotland including a fine "capsule history" of the country. The second lists every hamlet and village, describing its location, population (as small as 25!) and which churches records births, marriages and deaths. The exact location is shown on the shire (county) map. The OPR lists the dates for birth, marriage and death records for every parish and gives the film numbers for ordering from Salt Lake City or the National Archives. Here are some hints which I wish someone had given me when I started my research years ago.

1. Familiarize yourself with the historic background and geographical location where your ancestors are found. The tendency is to want to "find family" but a knowledge of events, employment and housing in historic periods will help you enormously as you move back from one generation to the next.

2. Scots had a naming pattern which was adhered to fairly assiduously until about 1850. If you have the names of children, the pattern will help you to identify the 'correct' parents from several possibilities, e.g., several STEWARTS who had a son John born the same year. The pattern is as follows:

First son - named for the father's father	First daughter - named for the mother's mother
Second son - named for the mother's father	Second daughter - named for the father's mother
Third son - named for the father	Third daughter - named for the mother

Subsequent children (and there were usually many more) were given names of aunts, uncles, or people who had special significance for the family, e.g., the minister, mayor, schoolmaster, etc.

3. Several names in Scotland are interchangeable, e.g., Hannah/Ann; Agnes/Nancy. OPR and census records can mislead you into thinking you've got the wrong family when they use Nancy in the 1841 census and Agnes in 1851!

4. Most OPR will use the words lawful (legitimate) or natural (illegitimate) when describing a birth. One advantage to the latter is that the mother will be named, whereas only the father is named in records prior to 1750

5. The 1855 Civil Registration of Scotland has extensive information (12-14 items) for EVERY person who was born, married or died in that year. For example, a birth record includes child's name, sex, date and time of birth, place of birth (including address), father's name, occupation, age and place of birth, date and place of marriage, number and sex of children born to the family and whether living or deceased, mother's married and maiden name, number of children she has born, her age and place of birth, the information and relation to the newborn, the date and place of registration and name of Registrar. Try to find someone in your family who was born, married or died in 1855. You will be rewarded with a great deal of valuable information!

6. After 1865 ALL female deaths are listed under BOTH the married and maiden name. When the certificate number is the same the researcher who has both names can verify the accuracy of the death dates and secure lots of additional information.

7. Death certificates often list not only the name of the informant and his/her relationship to the deceased, but also the person's address. The British Post Office is amazing in that it will forward mail for a patron who moved from an address 10-20 years prior! I have made contact with several direct line descendants using this method.

8. Newspaper obituaries are gold mines of information. There are directories listing these newspapers for every area of Scotland. They will often copy the obituary and send it to you (always include an international postal coupon). Libraries in close proximity to the place of death usually provide the same service as well.

9. Monumental inscriptions of cemeteries are often the only way to secure information on deaths prior to 1865. These books are available for microfilming through the Salt Lake City Family History Center. I just received copies of two of these which gave me the birth and death dates for 14 relatives.

Basic Information to Collect

1. The birth or christening date and place, the marriage date and place.
2 Documentation of 1, e.g., film number of record and where held, copy of actual record, place original record can be found. Note: I strongly recommend you read the original record for your direct ancestors. Original records frequently contain much more information than the IGI microfilm.

Places to Search

1. Check the Ancestral File on the computer at any Family History Center (FHC). If someone is doing research on your family you may save yourself a lot of time by 'plugging into' their data.
2. Use the International Genealogical Index and its addendum (which grows with every new edition).
3.. Check the OPR which are on both computer and microfiche at al FHCs.
4 The 1881 census on microfilm at all FHCs contains four ways to access data: by name, place, etc.

5. Order other census data which can be helpful from SLC FHL.
6 Trade Directories *
7. Electoral Rolls *
8. Deeds *
9. Kirk sessions *
10. Military Records *
11 Non-Conformist Church Records *
12. Sasines *
13. Service of Heirs *
14. Testaments *

* These are all explained in the Research Guide to Scotland. They are more difficult to access and derive information from because of the old form of writing and/or because they are written in Latin. Some have been filmed and are available from SLC. Others are in book form and a request for a microfiche copy can be made from SLC.

Some excellent reference books re these hints

The Research Guide for Scotland
The Surnames of Scotland, by George F. Black
Scottish Christian Names: an A-Z of First Names, by Leslie Ann Dunkling
Statistical Accounts of Scotland. There are three editions covering periods of time from the 17th to the 19th century. They are for each shire and although readily available in Scotland, they are difficult to find in the USA. SLC does have copies of all three editions.

Note: Betty Whamond Wurtz, GSWC member, has been doing Scottish research on her ancestors from Perth and Angus, Scotland, for ten years. She has maps of these areas and would gladly share these and any other information with those doing Scottish research.

REPATRIATION OATHS IN WASHTENAW COUNTY, MICHIGAN, 1937 - 1964

Nancy H. Krohn

A very small collection of documents created in Washtenaw County and relating to the repatriation of American born women is held at the State Archives in Lansing. From 1936 to 1940, under United States Public Law 793-74th Congress, American citizenship of American born women could be regained only if the marriage to an alien was terminated. (Certain other requirements were also made.) A public law in 1940 did away with the requirement of termination of marriage.

The form used until 1940 includes the Application to take Oath of Allegiance and the Oath of Renunciation and Allegiance with the signature of the applicant. This oath was to be administered in open court after the application had been referred to the Immigration and Naturalization service at Detroit for investigation. Evidence of birth, marriage and termination of the marriage was to be presented. It is not known where this evidence may be today. The later form, N-415, is similar. However, it appears the Oath of Renunciation was given on the same day that the Application was presented.

The article "Women and Naturalization, ca. 1802-1940" by Marian L. Smith (Prologue, Summer 1998, p. 146) is a detailed review of the eligibility of women to the naturalization process and includes some reference notes. This article my also be found on the internet.
